The Diamond Wedding.

The following is a poem which recently appeared tie N. Y. Tribune on the subject of the notorious damend welding." It led to the ridiculous cordence between Father Bartlett and Edmund adman, the author of the verses, alluded to in peters by New York correspondents. Mr. Stedbe wished, but offered him "the satisfaction o This, Mr. Bartlett did not desire si secordingly, to attain his other object, he is now ming the law" of the satyric versifier.]

05, Love! Love! Love! what times were those. Lug ere the age of belies and beaux, And Brussels lace and silken hose, Then, in the green Arcadian close, You married Psyche under the rose, With only the grass for bedding! Heart to heart, and hand in hand, You followed Nature's sweet command-Baning lovingly through the land,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY HENRY M. WHITNEY.

And the tall Archbishop stood between,
By prayer and fasting chastened;
The Pope himself would have come from Rome, But urgent matters kept him at home. Haply these robed prelates thought Their words were the power that tied the knot; But another power that love knot tied, And I saw the chain round the neck of the bride

And half-way longed for the will to undo it-By the secret tears she was shedding.

But isn't it odd, to think, whenever We all go through that terrible river, Whose sluggish tide alone can sever (The Archhishop says) the church decree, By floating one into Eternity And leaving the other alive as ever-As each waves through that ghastly stream, The satins that rustle and gems that gleam And the beautiful Empress over yonder, Whose crinoline made the wide world wonder-And even ourselves and our dear little wives, Who calico wear each morn of their lives-And the sewing girls-and les chiffoniers In rags and hunger the livelong day-And all the grooms of the caravau-Ay, even the great Don Estaban Santa Cruz de la Museovado Señor Grandissimo Oviedo-That gold-entrusted, fortunate man !-All will land in naked equality; The Lord of a ribboned principality

Will mourn the loss of his cordon; The Princess, too, must shift for herself, And lay her royalty on the shelf; Nothing to eat, and nothing to wear, Will certainly be the fashion there ! Ten to one, and I'll go it alone, Those most used to a rag and a bone-Though here on earth they labor and groan-Will stand it best when we come to rest On the other side of Jordan.

A glistening, priceless, marvelous chain, Coiled with diamonds again and again, As befits a diamond wedding; Yet still 'twas a chain—I thought she knew it,

Will grow pale and heavy and sink away
To the noisome river's bottom clay;
Then the costly bride, and her maidens six, Will shiver upon the banks of the Styx, Quite as helpless as they were born— Naked souls, and very forlorn;
